

Roman Pavements at Colchester.—In the statement of the find in Mr. Frost's garden (Transactions, vol. xvi., p. 295) the coin of Nero was described as being "between the two floors." Strictly speaking, there were not two floors at the spot mentioned; the coin was under the pavement described.

Again, on p. 296, the statement is made that "there is no record of any other mosaic pavement of pictorial design having been found in Colchester." Surely that described as being found in St. Martin's lane in 1793, in Mr. Bragg's premises, and duly figured in Vetusta Monumenta, vol. iii., pl. xxxix., is pictorial.
